

Here at pottedcolour.com children's garden programs are our passion.

Teaching where food comes from, how you grow it and what you can ultimately achieve in the kitchen with it - well there is nothing better or more rewarding. Many schools have now established vegetable gardens in their grounds, so everyone can be involved and get a little dirt on their hands. Primary, Secondary and even some Universities are getting in on this grow your own revolution.

This has now extended out into community centres, neighbourhood and outreach programs. People who have no access to a garden, students living away from home or people who are just learning to garden for the first time, and want to be able to expand on their knowledge and skills. Working together, side by side, with like minded people for a common goal.

There are even courses available at Community Colleges, TAFE and local learning centres that can help get you started.

We support this process, by assisting schools and not for profit community groups where we can, with information and the supply of seedlings to help make these programs a success. Our future starts with our children after all.
